CULTURING COMMUNITY: PROJECTS ABOUT PLACE

Over the past 18 months, several hundred people have been involved in bringing about the projects in Culturing Community, a true mark of the importance of community in creating these works of art. This poster attempts to thank all the individuals and groups who contributed in some way. We have listed them based on the project where they had the most involvement. Alas, despite best intentions, I'm sure we have forgotten someone. We value all you did for Culturing Community whether or not your name appears here.

A few people deserve special mention apart from the lists. Milton Severe designed the installation of the art of four very unique creations in the Faulconer Gallery, weaving them into a coherent presentation. As a native Grinnellian, he had a special perspective on how to bring the exhibition to the community. Tilly Woodward orchestrated the far-ranging programs intended to bring a wide audience to the Faulconer Gallery. Her insights into how to create a welcoming array and her deft touch with all our communities are greatly appreciated. Dan Strong made sure that our website reflected the work happening in the Gallery, and pitched in with the endless range of details inherent in such an undertaking. Annabel Wimer spent countless hours researching the components for the catalogue box and bringing them all together with wonderful design.

To the artists who agreed to be part of this endeavor, I thank you deeply. It is your willingness to work in community that cultures the creativity that shines throughout the exhibition. The following people have been helpful in bringing the project overall to fruition:

IDEAL X

The Moving Crew is the world's largest artist collective. We are a group of cultural animators that come together to generate projects that engage ideas of community, movement and transformation. Membership within the collective is amorphous, and ever growing; in fact, you might already be a member.

Thank you to all Moving Crew members who generously: designed images, invented narratives, produced videos, spotted containers, posted reports, participated in workshops and discussions, painted containers, screenprinted containers, assembled containers, stacked containers, carried containers, designed websites, maintained websites, initiated public actions, performed, choreographed, prepared meals, painted walls, drove cars, wrote theme songs, made tea, hosted, shared stories, and asked questions. This project was generated by all of us working together, side by side.
